TRADING AT HOME

Whether It Be with Doctors or Not Is Recommended.

A correspondent of the Barre Times points out that one reason why no phy sician would settle in Corinth is be cause when the town had a resident Police Officials in the Larger Cities Are medico, the people did not "employ him when they needed a physician, but would send to Topsham and other towns" believing that a doctor willing to live in Corinth must be inferior in skill to those residing in larger towns. If true, this is a somewhat vivid arraignment of the commonsense of Corinth people, but they are not alone. "Trade at home" is a slogan that some of us have worked to its limit. The conditions complained of apply not only to doctors but to merchants. newspapers, printers, churches and every one with services or goods for sale in a small town. Some of this bad judgment is a reflection of big-town arrogance and propaganda. New York people, for instance, have been known to suffer agonies because they refused to let "a country dentist" treat or extract their diseased molars, yet the average skill and ability of Vermont dentists is very high, much higher, we should say, than in New York.

The New Yorker's most biting deprecration of anything "off the island" to call it "small-town stuff," and a lot of silly people like to ape New Yorkers by repeating such foolishness, which echoes back to real small-town people with the suggestion that there some magic in the big town-usually a "violent presumption

So far as general practice is concerned, country doctors not only compare favorably with their city and bigger town brethren, but as a rule become much better and more reliable in diagnosing disease, due to the exigen-cies of the field and the extremely varied character of their practice. Also, the country doctor has the same access to advanced methods of treatment. He is usually honest enough to tell the patient when he needs the services of a specialist, so, first and last, he is not only a safe and useful man to employ but often of superior skill and know

All this is not getting a doctor for Corinth, but it is of direct useful application to the whole rural problem and is a plea for buying at home, trading at home, employing resident profession al men and making actual and practical use of home institutions and facilities Within reasonable and fairly wide limitations, nothing is lost and a great deal often gained by doing busines with our home folks.
